

A Community Partner Guide to Field Study

The Field Study Program was developed as a School of Social Ecology undergraduate degree requirement to immerse students in rigorous, innovative, and engaged learning through active participation in our community. During field placement, community partners provide guidance and mentorship to foster students' professionalization and community engagement, while students thoughtfully contribute to the organizations' programming and help support the communities they serve.

ABOUT OUR STUDENTS

The School of Social Ecology is an interdisciplinary unit whose scholarly research and instruction is informed by and contributes to knowledge in the social, behavioral, and environmental fields.

Students from the following majors are represented within our school:

Psychological Science: Interested in areas of mental health, counseling, education, health services, policy, and forensics; often pursue advanced degrees in counseling, psychology, and education

Criminology, Law & Society: Interested in areas of corrections, law, legal services, policing, forensics, and public policy; often pursue advanced degrees in law, forensics, and criminal justice

Urban Planning & Public Policy: Interested in areas of environmental education, planning, public policy, and health; completed courses in community development, sustainability, environmental design and/or governance

Environmental Science and Policy: Interested in environmental problem solving by linking the understanding of natural sciences with socioeconomic factors and public policy

All field study students are juniors or seniors and are in good academic standing
